

The same covariates tested two ways

Left, one observation per donor or sample. Right, the sample value copied onto each of its cells.
 Tile label = variance explained (R^2); shading = BH-adjusted significance.
 Copying a sample's value across its cells makes every covariate significant while shrinking the variance it explains, because the added rows are copies rather than independent observations.

